This document is meant to supplement your research about the educational and certification requirements for working as a Telemetry Cardiovascular Technician on a state-by-state basis, encompassing the United States territories as well.

Educational Preparation: The program at Forsyth Tech trains students to monitor and interpret cardiac rhythms, support diagnostic procedures, and assist in cardiovascular care units using telemetry equipment.

Licensure and Certification: Most states do not license telemetry technicians specifically, but employers may require credentials like the Certified Cardiographic Technician (CCT) from Cardiovascular Credentialing International (CCI). Certification requirements can vary based on job responsibilities. Students should verify expectations with potential employers or state healthcare organizations.
