This is recommended if you are planning on bringing in BattleTech miniatures. The paint set does not come with any models and will have to be purchased separately.

This link is to some BattleTech miniatures that can be purchased on Amazon. They are pre-assembled and do not require glue. BattleTech Miniatures can be purchased here: Link

Hobby cutters can be purchased from Hobby Lobby or Michael's. These are only needed if your models are not already assembled.

The recommended glue is Citadel Plastic glue. It can be purchased from Games Workshop for 8 dollars.

The solo cup is filled with water to clean your brush between paint colors.

This is not required but very useful. An empty medicine bottle with some sticky tac would do the same.

If the paint set you purchased does not come with a brush, you will need to purchase some fine tip brushes. They can be purchased from Hobby Lobby, Michaels, or Amazon.

Tabletop Gaming Miniature Painting Course

This hands-on workshop provides a welcoming, judgment-free space for beginner painters to develop their skills, share ideas, and collaborate with peers. We will discuss techniques, challenges, and successes.

Throughout the course, we will cover essential miniature painting techniques for tabletop-ready miniatures. You will learn the importance of thinning paints and applying multiple thin coats for a smooth, professional finish. We will also explore simple basing techniques to enhance your models and discuss strategies for overcoming hobby burnout.

This course will provide the tools and community to elevate your painting skills and is designed for those who have never assembled or painted a miniature model. If you want to bring in your current project and supplies, you are more than welcome!
